The Earth is currently experiencing its sixth mass extinction event. One million species are at risk of being lost forever in the upcoming decades due to human activity, including habitat destruction, overexploitation, climate change, and pollution. The Endangered Species Act is our strongest tool to recover imperiled species and the habitat upon which they depend. Ninety-nine percent of listed species have avoided extinction, and many are on the road to recovery because of the protections provided by this law. Learn how you can help protect endangered species and the Endangered Species Act at awionline.org/endorangeredspecies.
